

Welcome to Jingu Stadium,

History

Dating from 1925, the intercollegiate Tokyo Big6 league is the oldest baseball league in Japan, consisting of six prominent universities in Tokyo.

Jingu Stadium was completed with the help of Tokyo Big6 in 1926 with a capacity of 31,000 featuring large open seating areas. Renovated in later years, it currently provides individual seating for 31,828.

The Tokyo Big6 logo is an hexagonal arrangement of 6 kanji of the character "dai" which means "big" and is the first character in the Japanese term for university, "daigaku." The "B.B.L." inside the hexagon are the League's initials symbolizing the six universities coming together to play baseball.

The Spring season starts on the second Saturday in April and the Autumn season on the second Saturday in September. Game series are held on weekends so that each team matches up twice over 8 weeks, except the last weekend is reserved for games between Waseda and Keio. Their baseball rivalry is sometimes compared to the Oxford-Cambridge Boat Race in the U.K.

Games

The six teams play two eight-week seasons in the spring and autumn of each year.

Games are played on weekends, where teams play each other until one team wins two games, thus earning a point toward the season standings.

The season's ranking is decided by order of points or by the winning percentage if points are tied. If there is a tie in both points and winning percentage, the ranking order of previous season will prevail except for the top teams then the champion is decided by a playoff.

Games start on Saturday mornings, allowing for teams to play series against each other twice, or three times if necessary, during the season, except for the final weekend that is reserved for the Waseda vs Keio games.
